

Three Minute Thesis competition - 3MT

The 2024 Three Minute Thesis competition, known worldwide as '3MT', is now in full swing. Heats are about to take place at a College level, and then the final 12 will be preparing for the Grand Final at Llewellyn Hall on July 25. To reserve your tickets for the Grand Final, one of the must-see events on the annual calendar, before they all go, follow this link.

The Resilient Researcher

Dr Shari Walsh is an experienced psychologist and career development practitioner who utilises an holistic approach when working with clients.

Her highly popular sessions will help you work effectively and productively with others in a wide variety of situations.

Editing Boot Camp

You've done a whole lot of writing during candidature – now it's time to bang it into shape. If it feels like you've produced a loose, baggy thesis monster, we can help you tame it. This boot camp will help you understand a range of editing techniques that can be applied to various levels of document editing, from the overall structure of your thesis down to sentence-level details. By the end of this camp you will be able to produce a tidy, coherent document that promotes clear communication and meets examiner and reviewer expectations. Your inner perfectionist finally gets a chance to shine (for a little while, at least!).

This boot camp is suitable for late-stage candidates and is recommended for participants in the Home Stretch Program. Participants will work on their own documents and will need to bring an extended piece of writing for the activities (2 chapters or articles at a minimum).

The format will be a three-day Zoom meeting, strictly limited to 40 people from The Australian National University. This opportunity is available to ANU HDRs; priority will be given to Home Stretch participants.

Expressions of Interest close Fri 9 Aug at 9am.

Visualise Your Thesis

These days an online presence is vital if you want to develop awareness of your research and anything that goes further than a bit of text and a few pictures will always attract more attention.

Visualise Your Thesis is an exciting competition that takes this to next level, encouraging advanced visual literacy and helping PhD candidates develop their digital presentation skills. The last date for entry submission is August 23.
