

The Watervale Award

GUIDELINES

Background and Purpose

The Watervale Award is a competitive grant to support academic staff and postgraduate research students whose research includes the relationship of Indigenous language(s) to at least one of the following topics: public health, Indigenous identity, water and environment, education and development.

Awards are made on a competitive basis, with up to $10,000 available in total for 2021.

The Watervale Award has been generously supported by Ian and Laurel Fisher.

Guidelines

1. Eligibility

- 1.1 Current ANU academic staff and research students (including Honours).
- 1.2 Applications are welcome from individuals or teams but all parties named in the application must meet the criteria specified in 1.1 above, noting eligibility must be maintained for the duration of the award.

2. Application

- 2.1 Any individual or team who wishes to submit an application for this award must use the template available from the First Nations Portfolio (insert web address) and submit it by the deadline specified in Section 6 below.
- 2.2 The application must:
 - a. Include a research proposal that outlines a new or existing research project which explores at least one of the following themes and its relationship to Indigenous languages:
 - public health
 - Indigenous identity
 - water and environment
 - education
 - development
 - b. Specify the expected impact or benefit of the research, particularly for Indigenous communities.
 - c. Detail how Indigenous people will contribute to the research.

- d. Specify the amount of money being sought and how that money will be used to enable the research. It should include details of any other funding received or being sought from ANU or external sources.
- e. Detail the expected outputs/outcomes at the end of the funded period (12 months) – see section Timing and Reporting for the list of outputs.

3. Assessment Criteria

3.1 Applications will be assessed and ranked on the following, weighted as indicated:

- The extent of impact/benefit of the proposed research for Indigenous communities (30%)
- The synergy of the proposed research with the strategic objectives of the University and its First Nations Portfolio (30%)
- Project quality and innovation (20%)
- The extent of Indigenous engagement/involvement with the research (10%)
- Cost effectiveness of the research and its value for money (10%)

4. Process

2.1 A Panel will be established by the Vice-President (First Nations) to assess all applications after the application deadline. The Panel will consist of members from the academic and Indigenous community. The Panel will be supported by the First Nations portfolio.

2.2 The Panel will make a recommendation to the Vice-President (First Nations) who will have the final decision. If there is a potential conflict of interest for the Vice-President, the Vice-President will delegate the decision to another member of the University Executive.

2.3 The assessment process will be documented and all records kept by the First Nations Portfolio for the required period.

5. Timing and Reporting

5.1 The award period will be twelve months and must commence within one month of the acceptance of the award.

5.2 By the completion of the 12-month grant the recipient must produce at least one of the following outputs:

- a. A research paper
- b. A 'submitted' academic book chapter to a recognised and reputable academic text
- c. An edited academic volume, book or monograph
- d. A 'submitted' full grant application to a reputable granting organisation (e.g. ARC, NHMRC, Lowitja, etc.) or full research proposal to state or federal government or other high-level organisation (Cat 2).
- e. A symposium or workshop leading to a publication
- f. 'Other' document or publication deemed as an 'academic output'

- 5.3 Any unspent money at the end of the 12 months must be returned.
- 5.4 Any/all research outputs should be listed as ANU outputs and any publications must have an ANU by-line. Any outputs must acknowledge the support of the Watervale Award.
- 5.5 The recipient must provide a report to the Vice-President (First Nations) at the end of the award period, summarising the research undertaken, the outputs achieved, and the impact the research has had/will have on Indigenous communities. A template will be made available to the successful applicant. This report will be shared with the Donors of this award.
